

With this proceeding the FCC has the opportunity to completely kill off radio as we know it. Once there was quite a bit of diversity when you went from one city to another. Today unless you hear a station's call letters you could not tell what city you were in. Local radio has lost out to New York, Chicago, L.A. and other big centers. Any more consolidation, especially if you roll in newspapers, and it will all sound the same. We, the public, are the big losers here. All we get is more commercials and less local flavor. Please do not destroy what is left of our local flavor.
